Homeopathy in the NHS urgent appeal

Homeopathy has been part of the NHS since 1948.
The five NHS homeopathic hospitals are national centres of excellence but they are now under threat.

Financial pressures in the NHS mean that:

- Homeopathy services are being cut
- Chronically ill people are being denied access to homeopathic treatment that could help them
- Some patients are being told that they cannot continue their homeopathic treatment

The BHA is working with hospital staff, patients and the public to protect the NHS homeopathic hospitals, particularly those at Bristol, London and Tunbridge Wells

We urgently need funds to:

- Employ experts to help campaign against cuts in the hospitals' services and to develop new NHS homeopathy clinics in areas where patients can't get access to the homeopathic hospitals
- Co-ordinate a national patient outcome study involving all the hospitals in order to demonstrate their value to the NHS
- Organise a parliamentary campaign to influence policy on this issue
- Extend our media work to combat the negative attacks on homeopathy
- Support the efforts of local patient campaigning groups

Please make a donation now – thank you
